UNIVERSAL REMOTE CONTROL GENERATES BUZZ WITH WEBSITE OVERHAUL

Leading remote control manufacturer partners with The Buzz Farm to launch new website.

Bayside, NY – August 30, 2006 – Universal Remote Control, Inc. (URC), a global leader in control system design and manufacturing for home and professional entertainment systems, has unveiled a new website designed and developed by The Buzz Farm. Headquartered in Harriman, New York, URC's innovative new site reflects a fresh brand image and includes streamlined product content for consumers and professional audiences as well as a host of corporate and support information.

The site, located at www.universalremote.com, has been designed to help consumers easily determine which URC remote best meets their needs and to better provide URC's professional communities with the information and services that will help support their business objectives. The site features an intuitive interface and incorporates clean, contemporary Flash movies and other graphic features that reflect the modern aesthetic and user-friendliness of URC remote controls. Visitors will find that URC products and systems are easier than ever to locate, learn about and compare.

"URC challenged our team to develop an entirely new standard for the category," said David Mills, president of The Buzz Farm. "This included the design, formation and overall function of the site. Everything was considered, and everything was improved."

"The Buzz Farm didn't take us to the next level, they took us well beyond," added Jon Sienkiewicz, director of marketing at URC. "Simply stated, our new website changes everything."
